FRIENDCITIES VOL. 3.5

what is friendcities?

im so glad you asked! well basically, friendcities is a collaborative project created by a big group of friends! we call it an art zine but you can call it whatever you want. the goal here is for us to be able to share art with the world in a way that feels uninhibited and really just promotes creativity over all else. we hope you enjoy!

thats cool! can i follow you guys?

omg yes of course! we mainly operate on instagram.

the zine's account is @friendcities

THE REVIEW

FAITH MCBUTT presents
HORROR CLASSICS'
many selections

The Invisible Man (1933)

It was so boring I fell asleep. Una O'Conner carried and all she did was obnoxiously scream and speak.

Dracula (1931)

Also VERY boring. A classic for sure but something I would never watch again. Dracula's stare was so funny though and I love the bats on strings.

Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1956)

It was all very predictable, but it held my attention. Very good, definitely a good classic. I would watch it again during Halloween season

The Wolf Man (1941)

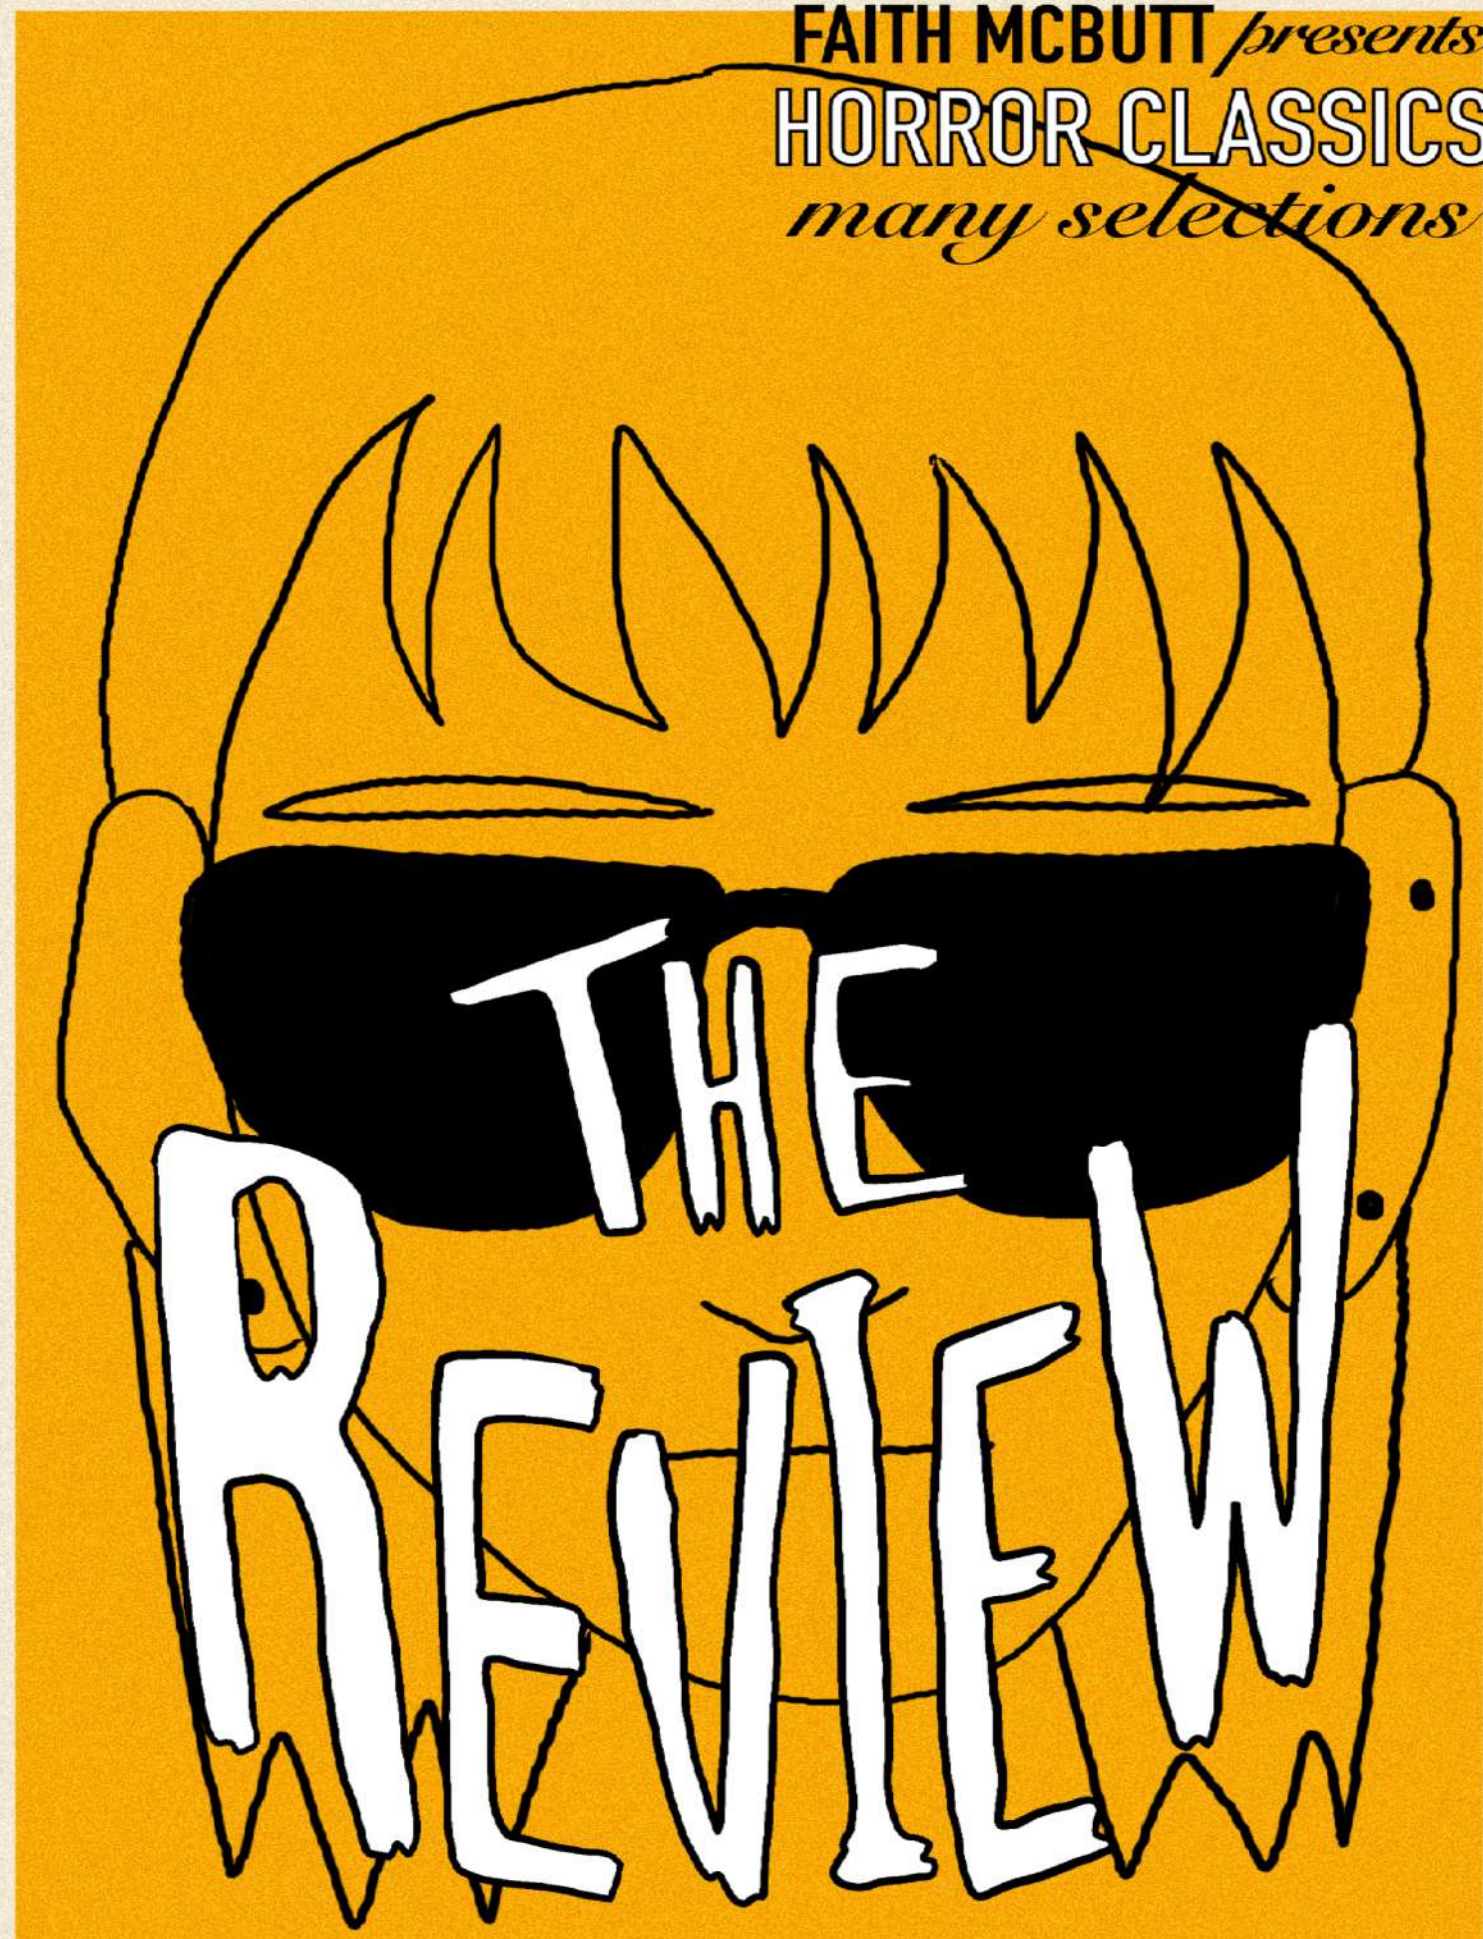

More exciting than Dracula but it didn't grab my attention. To be fair, however, I spaced out during 80% of the movie.

The Mummy (1932)

The Brendan Fraser version was better. Very boring movie, didn't pay attention to the entire thing.

House on Haunted Hill (1959)

Kind of fun ngl. Reminded me of clue but if the clue movie tried to be serious. Enjoyable enough to watch again.
