friendcities: what is it?

well, BASICALLY we're a bunch of friends who share one thing... we love to make art. among probably other stuff we share. we all come together to make this zine for your viewing pleasure and as a creative outlet. we can use this platform to uplift eachother, make our voices heard, and just get some eyes on our cool art. we really hope you like what we put together, but honestly i don't see how you couldn't. enjoy!

- andrue :) (voupie)

Back home: We wear:

We sure do love flower crowns!

Traditional Mexican clothing incorporates a lot of embroidery. There are many different styles through the different states of course!

Something we like to accessorize with is a sort of long shawl. Referred to as a 'rebozo'. You could wrap it around your head, or shoulders.

Mothers will often use these rebozo's to wrap their babies against them. Pregnant women are also known to wrap it around their waist for comfort.

I personally remember my grandma wrapping up my little brothers and sisters very often like this.

Fun fact!

During the Mexican Revolution, there were many women who fought as Soldaderas, or female soldiers. Here's a picture of a group of soldaderas. Typically wearing long skirts, and carrying ammunition on them.

where i'm from we wear:

~Umukenyero ~

The umukenyero is the traditional ceremonial dress of women in Rwanda. They consist of a wrapped skirt and plain shirt or bustier with a sash draped over one shoulder. also sometimes adorned with a headpiece! They are worn during formal occasions like church events or weddings :)
